1 Licensing

To use the Pepperl+Fuchs apps for IGEL without restrictions, you need a commercial license key. You can purchase this from Pepperl+Fuchs.

You have the option of deploying licenses centrally via the Pepperl+Fuchs License Manager or you can enter licenses locally on devices.

The following topology describes both setups:

Setup using the central server (Pepperl+Fuchs License Manager):

Setup with locally entered licenses:

Pepperl+Fuchs License Manager

The Pepperl+Fuchs License Manager lets you manage all your licenses for your Pepperl+Fuchs devices running IGEL OS.

Under License Key Overview, you can find all currently entered license keys. You can also delete licenses there.

Under License Assignment, you can assign licenses to devices and revoke them. Please note that these are floating licenses. This means that devices can automatically obtain an available license when there are unassigned ones available. This license then remains on the device for 30 days. If no action (e.g., a scan) is performed during this time, the license is automatically released and can be assigned to a new device.

Under settings, you can set how long licenses remain on a device before they are released. By default, a license remains on a device for 720 hours (30 days). If the app is not used during this time, the license is released. If the connection cannot be established between the device and the License Manager, the device enters grace period. This allows you to use the app without restrictions for 7 days. After this period, the connection to the License Manager must be re-established to continue using the app.

Software and license information can be found under the "About" tab.

App Licensing

As described in the section on licensing, there are two ways to license the Pepperl+Fuchs Apps:

Setup using the central server (Pepperl+Fuchs License Manager)

1. Check the box next to the circled option.

2. Ensure you have enough free licenses on the Pepperl+Fuchs License Server. Instructions on how to download the License Manager can be found in the Licensing section.
3. The first time the Wedge app scans, a license is automatically assigned to the device by the License Manager, provided there are available licenses. This license remains assigned to the device for 30 days unless manually revoked in the License Manager. Each use of the Wedge app on the device restarts the 30-day period. If the app is not used for 30 days, the license becomes available again and can be automatically assigned to another device when that device uses the Wedge app.

Setup with locally entered licenses

1. If you are not using the License Manager, you can also enter the licenses locally. To do this, select the circled option and enter the license key manually.

2 Wedge App for IGEL

2.1 Function

The Wedge App for IGEL converts serial input (RS232, RS485, RS422) into HID input. This application is designed specifically for the Pepperl+Fuchs VisuNet GXP operator workstation, which provides only serial ports for connecting peripheral devices such as barcode readers.

2.2 App Instructions

Scan Codes

1. Make sure the Pepperl+Fuchs Wedge app is enabled in the settings.

2. Ensure the scanner is connected to the correct COM port. The detected port must match the port selected in the settings. If the ports do not match, change the port in the settings.

Licensing

Function Key Emulation

The character strings from the serial port are transferred into keystrokes according to the mapping table. This allows you to emulate a keyboard input with the barcode scanner and to send the inputs to your host PC. The character strings consist of actual content and on the barcodes you scan. Control characters do not contain content but trigger various actions. In the function key emulation section, you can configure different actions for each control character by using the drop-down list.

Trial Mode

If you have not assigned a valid license to the device, Trial Mode is used by default. This allows you to scan 200 characters, which is approximately 15 scans. Use a valid commercial license to perform more scans.

Demo Mode

Demo licenses can be used for testing purposes. Use a valid commercial license to perform further scans.

Grace Period

If the connection cannot be established between the device and the License Manager, the device enters grace period. This allows you to use the Wedge app without restrictions for 7 days. After this period, the connection to the License Manager must be re-established to continue using the app.

3 KM-Switch App for IGEL

3.1 Function

The KM-Switch App for IGEL allows users to use one set of peripherals (mouse and keyboard) to operate two independent PCs/ Thin Clients. These PCs need to be connected via a serial data cable. This allows the operation of duplex or dual Monitor Systems with one set of peripherals.

For flawless operation both devices must use the same keyboard layout.

3.2 App Instructions

Setup KM-Switch

1. Make sure the Pepperl+Fuchs KM-Switch app is enabled in the settings.

2. For the main device check the Box "Enable Master Mode". For the subordinate device leave the box unchecked.

3. Select the connected COM Port from the dropdown menu.
